Bronx, NY, May 27, 2008—Wave Hill, a public garden and cultural center, announces new commissions by cutting-edge artists on view this summer. Opening on June 11, In Response: Summer Projects features six artists who invigorate the rooms of Glyndor Gallery and the south lawn with provocative installations that contrast the wildness of nature with the human impulse to intervene. The formality of the North Gallery is a foil for Andrew Cooks' paintings on paper that function as decorative wall panels, drawing inspiration from French and Persian gardens as well as Wave Hill's garden plan and collection. Miami-based photographer Maria Martinez-Cañas transforms the center room into a sensory experience with woodland photographs adhered to the walls, coated with beeswax and interspersed with curly willow branches. Christopher Russell explores the highly ordered life of bees through a series of ceramic sculptures that play on the rich tradition of nature-inspired still life ceramics. Christian Nguyen's wall drawing and architectural fragments refer to spaces carved out of the landscape that are both utopian and sacred. In the sun porch Milton Rosa-Ortiz flips the experience of the room by creating an imaginary, upside-down, floating pond, its surface rippled with ice shards, and a three-dimensional floating flower at the center. On the sloping lawn below the gallery Scherezade has created a curving wall that merges into the landscape by weaving images of the natural and urban environments that flutter in the breeze.

Collectively these works invite visitors to experience the exuberant summer landscape in a new way. A new exhibition tour program and a variety of public programs offer a variety of ways to engage with the exhibition and meet the artists.
